the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are undernourished has increased from 600 million to 800 million.

Undernourishment is defined as the lack of sufficient food to meet the minimum energy requirements for a healthy and active life. It is not the same as hunger, which is a physical sensation.

Undernourishment is a chronic condition, whereas hunger is an acute condition. Undernourishment is a state of being, whereas hunger is a feeling. Undernourishment is a lack of sufficient food, whereas hunger is a physical sensation.
